MEET DATHIN

"Dathin will pretty much do or try anything," says his mother, April Cooper. "He loves to be social and meet new people. He makes friends so easily."

April and her husband, CJ, can't imagine life without their joyful, outgoing third child and the light he brings to the lives of everyone he meets. But the Coopers can remember darker days, when they learned their baby boy faced multiple health conditions, including spina bifida, hydrocephalus, severe scoliosis, heart defects and lung issues. It was a struggle to keep Dathin stable in those early days, but he was in good hands with Children's team of pediatric specialists.

When the day arrived when Dathin was well enough to leave Children's Neonatal Intensive Care unit, the couple quickly learned that caring for a baby who required so much equipment and attention wasn't easy. Dathin would require regular appointments to see his many Children's specialists, and the thought of driving from Lincoln to Omaha with Dathin terrified April.

"What if he needed suctioning or stopped breathing while I was on the interstate? What would I do?" April recalls. Fortunately for the Coopers, Children's Specialty Pediatric Clinic opened in Lincoln around that time.

"Dathin had so many specialists. But to know that all of them were going to come to the Lincoln clinic, I felt more empowered with our ability to take him home. I knew we could do this and that I could take care of my son," she says.

Today, daily life is a lot easier for the Cooper family, though Dathin still sees several specialists.

"He might have to do things a little differently than other people, but there's no reason he can't do it," says CJ. "I want him to continue to shine the light that he's been shining since he came into the world."
